I am adamantly opposed to social media use especially FB. Its primary purpose is data mining of clueless users.

I do use my phone to check out eBay almost every day. I recently purchased a DMR radio and still haven't made a contact, where with all my analog radios I've had a contact within ten minutes of turning it on.

Facebook.

2/9/2020 5:31 PM Add tags - View respondent's answers

Yes but I avoid facebook due to privacy concerns. The email alert reflector is a step in the right direction.

I was using Facebook but have reduced my usage. I also use LinkedIn but that is almost pointless because I am retired.

Linked-in is my most frequent medium, weekly. I rarely use Facebook, and only as a reference source. I have a Twitter account, but don't find it that useful. I'm inundated with media by the nature of my work and interests, and in search of a clearer, more focused and relevant pipeline

2/8/2020 10:15 AM Add tags – View respondent's answers

Hardly any. I only recently stumbled on the CT ARES Yahoo group. Although I have on-line accounts I find Facebook, Twitter, and the rest too intrusive, cluttered, and, in many cases, divisive. My REAL life is hard enough to manage without having to worry about keeping up to date on-line! :) But if ARES is using these to communicate I would as well.
